

Awakening Humanity at Work:

Leadership that Cultivates Compassion, Wisdom, and Well-Being in a New Age

May 30–31 2019

Business 4.0 transformation drivers affecting all industries and sectors globally are having a significant impact on the experience of today's work.

While for some, this new era of constant change invites in prosperity, for others it ushers in isolation, loneliness and fear.

It is becoming clear in the new context, business will need to serve a purpose broader than just revenue generation and organizational cultures will need to be grounded on trust and well-being.

Humanity Needs a New Form of Leadership

Drawing from a significant body of research, we are delighted to present key findings of a recent collaborative study focusing on the key attributes of human-centered leadership.

We invite all 21st century leaders to join us taking part in the process of re-generation and making the experience of work better!

Stanford CCARE

Championing humanity in the global workplace.
WHIRLING CHIEF

Audience

Corporate executives, organizational leaders and those in influencing roles who want to immerse in the new science of compassion and well-being and explore the strategic value of human-centered leadership to create stakeholder and shareholder value.

Program Objectives

In this powerful two-day program, we will use the latest research, exploring how a neuroscientific and physiological approach to building an organizational culture of compassion, wisdom and well-being changes what we think we know about the basics of human and organizational psychology.

Along with like-minded fellow travelers on a journey of evolution, we will jointly participate in a discussion about how to develop new qualities within ourselves and within the organizational ecosystems lived and create action plans that inspire our own thriving.

Benefits

Key experiences are consciously designed to provide discovery of core human attributes and gaining self-awareness on the road to self-mastery.

Some of the benefits realized through a combination of classroom learning, experiential work, discussion, and case study will include:

- Gain a better understanding of the scientific basis for an emphasis on compassion and well-being in the workplace,
- Increase consciousness and build skill in expanding inner and outer capacity,
- Recognize thinking habits and biases that work for you and against you in unlocking potential in self and in others,
- Learn about and experiment with some new taxonomy of 'being',
- Develop methodologies to lift self and practices necessary for mastering effective culture transformation.

Program Facilitators

Developed as a collaboration between Stanford University's Center for Compassion and Altruism Research and Education (CCARE) and SESIL PIR Consulting GmbH, the program will bring together facilitators that are expert in their field of neuroscience, organizational psychology, positive psychology and organizational development.

Agenda

Day 1: The New World of Work and Exploring Human-Centered Leadership
Day 2: Applying the Framework and Building a Plan Forward

Venue

WA State, TBD location.

Pilot Pricing Info

Discounted rate 6,000 USD / person, plus travel costs.

Get Tickets

Make payment via PAYPAL